ROOFING COMPANY AWARDED VERDICT

Given Sum of $376.83, which Was Original Amount and Interest

OTHER CASES HEARD

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 22.—The Interstate Roofing & Supply Company, of Chicago, was given a verdict in an assumpsit action by a jury which deliberated less than five minutes.

The defendants, Adolph G. Kronfield and his wife, who were without counsel, were alleged to have bought a roof for their house and had other minor repairs made which amounted to $367. Of this amount, Kronfield, it was testified, paid the initial cost of $17, and refused to pay the balance.

The only witness to take the stand was Joseph C. Godshalk, 115 Sharon avenue, Collingdale, a former representative for the roofing and supply company, who testified the work done to the Kronfield home was satisfactory.

The plaintiffs were given the sum of $376.83, which included the $350 plus one year's interest.

Claiming damages amounting to nearly $1,000, the trespass suit of Wesley W. Rusk, this place, versus Samuel Bomgardner and his wife, Zelma Bomgardner, went on trial yesterday afternoon before Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

The plaintiff, Wesley W. Rusk, a former County Seat resident, testified that on the morning of August 15, 1931, while rounding the curve at the Catholic church, his car was struck by a large stone truck driven by an employee of the Bomgardner hauling company.

Rusk, who testified his car was struck on the side by the bumper of the heavy stone truck, tried to avoid the collision by swerving out of the path of the truck. The truck, he stated, crashed into a stone post on the property of Mrs. John C. Swartley after hitting his car.

According to his testimony, the sedan, which was new, was damaged so that it took almost four months to repair, repaint and recondition the car.

In the meantime, he was compelled to hire another car to carry on his business. He is a salesman for an oil concern.

Clinton L. Heckman, a member of a Stroudsburg motor company, was the first witness to take the stand this morning.

He described the plaintiff's car as a "good wreck" following the accident. Under the direction of Tipstaff Walter A. Scott, members of the jury visited the scene of the accident.

No disposition was made at noon today.

Somewhat wearied from their task, the jury of five women and seven men started the fourth day of the civil court trial of the case of Elwood M. Reed, Richlandtown township contractor, against John Strand and Minnie Strand, of Bridgeton township. The case is being tried before President Judge Hiram H. Keller.

The long, drawn-out trial, is the result of a house that was built for Strand by Reed, which Strand claims was not "up to specifications." Every minute detail of construction has been explained at length to the jury, from the cellar to the roof, and witnesses have spent as long as two hours on the witness stand under examination and cross-examination. The amount involved according to the plaintiff is $2,658.87. The case is expected to go to the jury tomorrow morning.

A motion was filed by the plaintiff for a new trial in the case of Meyer, Benjamin and Samuel Komins against Standard Radio Shop, in which a verdict was rendered earlier this week for the plaintiff in the sum of $67.13. A motion was filed by the defendant for a new trial in the case of Robert M. Neamand against Mrs. Mary McBride, in which a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $84, earlier in the week.

WILLIAM PENN

Following is the last of a series of historical sketches published in connection with the observance of the 250th anniversary of the arrival of William Penn in America; and the presentation to the State of Pennsylvania of the deed to the site of Pennsbury Manor, home of William Penn, along the Delaware River. The presentation of the deed is to take place Sunday, October 23rd, at Pennsbury.

ARTICLE IV.

No one can read the life of William Penn, without the thought coming into his mind, that he was "a man called of God," for the performance of a special mission. Just as Washington was called in later years to fight America's battle for freedom, and to establish a sound government, and just as Lincoln was selected as the National leader, to guide the nation through those perilous days of civil strife, so William Penn was apparently selected by an all-wise Creator, to give exemplification to a form of government, that combined the elements of Statescraft with the sincere conviction of the existence of a Spiritual Being who was the Guide and Controller of the universe.

From the moment in his boyhood, when sitting in his room thinking, a strange feeling of being comforted came over him, and he felt that the Lord God was there with him; through his days of study at Oxford, where he and some of his fellow students held meetings among themselves; during his sojourn in Paris, where he resisted the evils which surrounded him, and where he acquired that polish of manner for which the French are noted; and finally when he listened for the third time to the preaching of the distinguished Friend, Thomas Lee, and embraced the Quaker religion, it would seem that his life was being moulded and shaped by an unseen hand, so that in the strength and vigor of his young manhood, he could accent the call to love and serve his Heavenly Father.

When 24 years old, William Penn became an earnest preacher. Prison walls became his abode. Estrangement from a disappointed and angry father followed. False accusations and humiliations beset him, but he never once faltered in his allegiance to God. These early years seemed to be a preparation for the specific work that God had planned to entrust to him. This work had its beginning when Penn was able to effect an amicable settlement of the difficulties, which existed between Fenwick and Bylinne, over the sale by Lord Berkeley, of his share of New Jersey. As a reward Penn was made a trustee. From this moment he began to evince an interest in America, then a new land of adventure and promise, and soon after began to form that plan for the government of Pennsylvania, which was destined to become his greatest achievement.

That Penn was actuated by a spiritual motive, can be gleaned from a letter which he wrote to a friend, in which he said, that he "so desired to obtain the new land as that I may not be unworthy of God's love . . . and that an example may be set up to the nations . . . that there was room there (in America) for such a holy experiment."

Thus can be seen the unfolding of God's plan. Penn soon after his arrival in America, laid out a city between the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers, and called it Philadelphia, meaning "brotherly love." His treaty with the Indians was founded upon kindness and justice, in conformity with his Christian training, and the evidence of its effectiveness was revealed in the Indians' pledge of friendship: "We will live in love with William Penn and his children as long as the moon and stars shall endure."

SELLERSVILLE WATER SUPPLY IMPROVED

Catch Basin Enlarged and Dam Wall Being Raised

CHLORINATOR BOUGHT

SELLERSVILLE, Oct. 22.—Improvements which will increase Sellersville borough's water supply by 1,800,000 gallons, are now nearing completion.

The project includes a new concrete dam practically finished, at the borough catch basin. O'Rourke Brothers, contractors, have been working on the reconstruction of the spillway for the past week. The work will cost approximately $900.

The old wall is being replaced by one twenty-one feet long and ten feet wide. It is to be five feet high, which is fourteen inches higher than the old one. This increase in height will retain a body of water covering about six acres, and brings about the increased storage capacity of the basin. The long dry spell this summer brought on the prompt completion of the project, which Sellersville Borough Council has had under consideration for the past three years. Since the drought at that time, when Sellersville was left high and dry, and forced to draw upon Perkasie, through the fire company's pumper, council and its engineers have been trying to figure out some way of increasing the supply, and the raising of the dam was the final answer.

Before the still-prevalent rains started this week, council had under consideration the immediate sinking of a new well, or the increase of the reservoir's capacity without loss of time as an emergency measure. F. D. Friel, of Albright and Friel, Philadelphia engineers, estimated that the cost of expansion at the reservoir would be $10,000. The digging of a new well and installing the necessary equipment was set at $8,500.

The simple expedient of raising the dam level and the helpful rains thus saved the borough approximately $18,500.

The borough is also making an improvement to the water system in the purchase of a solution feed type of chlorinator to cost $900. This will be used to purify borough water. Almost half the cost of the apparatus will be absorbed in the trade-in value of the old one.

Council has been assured by the manufacturers that the new chlorinator will be less expensive to operate than the old one, as the mechanism has been improved in such a way as to avoid the breakdowns that were common with the apparatus that is in use at the present time.

ON AGAIN; OFF AGAIN

(By "The Stroller")

During the early hours of Friday morning when the fire whistle "took-a-fit" and blew at frequent intervals, some of the members of the Consolidated Fire Department had a busy time.

At the first blast of the whistle they leaped out of bed and started to dress. Then no more whistle—so back to bed.

Then within a few minutes the whistle blew again, so the performance was repeated by the firemen with the same result.

Chief McGee dressed three times and Charles P. Aita says he got as far as the sidewalk once.

Bare wires are blamed for the whistle's action.

HOOVER WARMLY GREETED

En Route to Detroit with President

Hoover, Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 22.—A change in the laws which will prevent the "co-operative marketing" of coal, was advocated by President Hoover today as he campaigned through the Kanawha Valley of West Virginia, one of the greatest coal regions of the country.

Mr. Hoover came into West Virginia pledging his support of the protective tariff which he charges the Democrats plan to destroy. On his part, he said he plans to maintain it.

A crowd of thousands greeted the President here, at Charleston, the first stop ending a day of strenuous campaigning through West Virginia and Ohio en route to Detroit.

From his seat on the train President Hoover was escorted to the stadium a stone's throw from the station for a brief speech. Between 15,000 and 20,000 persons were packed into the stadium. They filled the seats and were packed on the flying field. Mr. Hoover commented on the fact so many people would come out so early in the morning. "I recognize," he said, "that this is a demonstration which has been shown no public man in years."

Through the first part of the brief speech dealing with the tariff, the throng listened with occasional applause, but when he reached that part dealing with the coal there was a rousing cheer. Coal means much toward the prosperity of West Virginia. Republican leaders had arranged a sizeable rally and Mr. Hoover was given a cordial welcome.

ELEVEN FROM BRISTOL LOSES TO DOYLESTOWN

Drops Game at County Seat,
13 to 6; First Defeat
of Season

WINNERS' HEAVY LINE

(By Oscar Corn)

The Bristol High eleven dropped a spectacular and hard-fought game to Doylestown, 13-6, yesterday, at the county seat.

This was the first defeat of the season for the Cardinal and Gray team, although they were the first to cross the Doylestown eleven's goal. Doylestown scored in the second and fourth periods, while Bristol tallied only in the final canto.

Doylestown had a much heavier line than the local boys, and their backfield outweighed Bristol's ball-carriers by 30 pounds.

Spencer started the game with a fine kick to Doylestown's 20-yard line. They advanced the ball to their 38-yard line. There was an exchange of kicks, which ended with the ball lying in midfield, with Doylestown having the ball. On the next play Cole intercepted a pass on the 40-yard line, and plunging through the entire Doylestown team he made 20 yards. Bornice was given the ball and by splendid interference gained another 20 yards.

The breaks then turned to Doylestown. On a fumble and a penalty Bristol lost 20 yards. Being last down, Bornice was again given the ball and on an end-run made 18 yards. This was just two yards short of a first down.

Doylestown started a march down the field. After making a first down, Doylestown gave the ball to Kline, who on a very deceptive cut-back broke loose and ran 53 yards before he was stopped. This put the ball on the 8-yard line just as the quarter ended.

Bristol held desperately and prevented their opponents from scoring. Cole was out of danger to the 30-yard line.

Again Doylestown made a march which put the ball on the six-yard line, with four downs to put it over. Three tries for the touchdown were stopped by the Cardinal and Gray line, but on the last down the frantic county-seaters gained a foot which put the ball over for a six-pointer, by an inch, according to the officials' decision.

Doylestown kicked to Spencer, who received the ball on the 10-yard line and by clever field running, thundered madly down the field for 50 yards, placing the ball on Doylestown's 40-yard line. Bornice, who starred on all end-run plays, was given the ball and again he sped 20 yards. The quarter and half ended with the ball in Bristol's possession.

The third period was uneventful, except for another 50-yard run by Spencer on the kick-off, and Hartzell's 40-yard run on a reverse play.

CORRECTION

There was a typographical error in one of the advertisements of the United Cut Rate Store which appeared in the Courier yesterday. Boxes of 50 cigars regularly selling for ten cents each, were advertised at $2.65. It should have been $3.65. The United Cut Rate Store had many requests for the cigars at this special price and was caused much inconvenience and embarrassment due to the typographical error. The corrected advertisement appears elsewhere in the Courier today.

TO PRESENT DEED FOR PENNSBURY SITE TOMORROW

Public Invited to Attend the Epoch-Making Ceremonies

MANY NOTED SPEAKERS

Ample Parking Facilities Arranged to Care for 500 Cars

Public Invited

Realizing the great amount of interest being manifested in the ceremonies in connection with the presentation of the deed to the site of Pennsbury which occurs tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock, the Courier communicated with the officers of the Welcome Society of Pennsylvania, which organization is sponsoring the affair and in behalf of that organization cordially extends an invitation to the public to attend the ceremonies.

Ample provision has been made to care for a large gathering. There is adequate parking space for cars and a group of noted speakers will deliver addresses in connection with the presentation of the deed to the site of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

After two and one-half centuries the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is to have and hold by deed of gift the site of Pennsbury Manor, home of William Penn along the Delaware River near Tullytown.

Neglected and almost forgotten for more than 150 years the property is to be returned to the State tomorrow, the day preceding state-wide observance of William Penn Commemoration Day as the 250th anniversary of the arrival of Penn in America.

The program for the day which begins at three o'clock is under the direction of The Welcome Society of Pennsylvania.

Charles Warner, representing the Warner Sand Company, will present the deed for Pennsbury to the state, and there will be an historical address by Dr. B. F. Fackenthal, Jr., president of the Bucks County Historical Society. Dr. James N. Rule, chairman Pennsylvania Historical Commission, will accept the deed on behalf of the state.

Six of the original 6,550 acres of Pennsbury, including the part upon which stood the large colonial house and gardens, will be transferred by the present owners, the Warner Sand Company, to the state of Pennsylvania through the State Historical Commission. When funds are available the Commission plans to make the place accessible with good roads, restore the gardens, and create a memorial park. Historians and others are anxious to see the house rebuilt and made a museum.

It is expected there will be several thousands of people at the exercises tomorrow afternoon and preparations have been made to handle at least 500 automobiles.

A speaker's stand has been erected facing the spot where the foundations of the original house stood. An amplifying system has been installed to carry the speakers' remarks to all sections of the grounds.

The route to Pennsbury will be plainly marked and motorists will leave the Bristol Pike at the Bordenstown Road, near Tullytown. Turn off the Bordenstown Road to the right at the first railroad crossing and follow this route to the place where the exercises will be staged.

Showman All Dressed Up; With No Place To Go

Chief Mohawk, a full-blooded Mohawk Indian, who was booked to appear at the Riverside Theatre in person this afternoon and evening, arrived this morning, but had no place to go.

The theatre is closed, and the veteran of the Spanish-American War, finds himself without a booking for today. He arrived the middle of the morning, garbed in a black Prince Albert coat, high-crowned, gray felt hat, wearing a diamond horse-shoe pin in his necktie, and carrying a cane. He was the center of interest for dozens of children in the business section.

On Wednesday evening Chief Mohawk appeared at the Manor Theatre, Crofton, and his appearance here was eagerly looked forward to by the youngsters. He was booked to give Indian songs, dances and tales of Indian life, appearing on the same program as the motion picture "Before the White Man Came." Chief Mohawk was born in New York June 23, 1857. He now resides in Philadelphia.

CAUTIONS FOR MOTORIST

The subject of caution in automobile driving has been repeated many times. Yet pedestrians who have narrow escapes, and the careful drivers who are almost smashed up as the result of some speeder's "scorching," will not want the newspapers to stop talking about this thing. They will want the subject dinned into the ears of the public indefinitely.

There are some drivers who are impervious to criticism. About the only way to deal with them is to file a complaint against them, take away their license or otherwise penalize them.

The majority of drivers, however, should be accessible to reason, and should realize that the highways are becoming more crowded every year, and that the degree of caution that was fairly adequate a few years ago, is no longer enough.

Many operators have constantly been doing things which would create an accident if they did not have good luck. If they attempt to pass a car on a curve where their view is hidden, they are likely to have a smash if a car is coming around in the opposite direction at that particular moment. They may do it a number of times and avoid a smash. But if the number of cars has doubled in their locality within the past few years, as it has in most sections, the chance of a collision when they perform that stunt has precisely doubled within that time. If they keep doing that thing, it is practically certain that they will have a smash-up in the near future.

It is a most distressing experience to go through an automobile accident. Those who have injured other people bitterly regret their carelessness if they have been at fault. It is infinitely better to show a pleasant spirit of courtesy, take things easy on the roads, and avoid the regret and loss that must come from a serious accident.

The critic who said the typical mudist is putting on airs probably meant taking the air.

One hopes those California ranchers, who are trying to exterminate a predatory bear, are more successful than the serene wasps.

upon religious principles, but entirely free from religious intolerance, for no one was to be molested for his religious persuasion or practice. And so we find in the apparent unfolding of God's plan, our great State of Pennsylvania came into existence. Perhaps no other State in the Union has such a religious background or so forcibly represents the consummation of a Divine destiny.

It is particularly gratifying to the citizens of Bristol, that the location which Penn selected for his manor home, should have been in this locality. Likewise the services on this coming Sunday, when the land originally owned by Penn, will be presented to "The Welcome Society" of Pennsylvania, by the Warner Company, will have a peculiar interest to Bristol's citizens. William Penn by his Godly life, left his impress upon the hearts of his followers, and this impress was exemplified in the founding of Bristol by the Quakers and its subsequent development during its early years. Bristol, like Philadelphia, was a typical Quaker settlement, with a Christian foundation, where the people lived in peace and harmony with one another, and where religious intolerance or bigotry were unknown. While William Penn may never have visited this neighborhood, yet the influence which flowed out from his Godly life was felt, and in consequence, binds him to us just as closely, as his actual presence was an inspiration and influence to his followers in the city of "brotherly love."

In a quaint old Quaker burial ground situated at Jordans, about 28 miles from London, rest the remains of William Penn.

It is an absolutely rural district away from the main road, and with very few houses adjacent to it. The buildings at Jordans consist of an old cottage facing into a lane, and which is evidently 250 years old. At the back of this cottage is the Friends' Meeting House. It is very small, but arrangements are made so that when the number of Friends is too large for accommodations, the bedroom and kitchen of the cottage can be thrown into the meeting room by opening shutters.

Only one regular meeting is held each year in this Meeting House, and this, as a rule, is the last Sunday in May. Sometimes the number in attendance is too large for the accommodations provided within doors, and the service is then held in the graveyard adjoining, which is within five or six yards of the entrance to the meeting house.

The graveyard is simply a grassed plot, kept roughly mown, surrounded by fine trees. The size is about three-quarters of an acre. There are 350 people known to be buried here, but only about ten of the graves are marked with headstones. All those belonging to the Penn family have a small stone about 18 inches by 18 inches above the ground, giving simply the name and date.

The spot is eminently suited for the last resting place of William Penn. The place is the property of the Society of Friends, who never allow any monument of any sort to be erected in their burial places, and they would oppose the removal of the remains, or any interference whatsoever as regards keeping the burial ground in any other manner than is their custom. The late Andrew Carnegie, a few years before his death, visited Jordans, and looked upon the grave of William Penn. In writing about his visit, he said:

"Only Penns and Penningtons have headstones, and one man who is buried just outside the rest for the reason that he had a weakness for fox hunting. It is a lovely retired burial place, edged with tall lime trees, and buried deeply in leafy Buckinghamshire. For the Founder of Pennsylvania it is an ideal place and to move his bones would be a great sacrilege."

Jordans, while near London, has long been a somewhat difficult place to visit. Interest in William Penn has increased so much of late years, that bi-weekly excursions are now made to this quaint burial ground. Visitors are taken by rail to Chorley Wood Station, whence a well-appointed conveyance proceeds on a delightful drive via Chertsey and Chalfont St. Giles to Jordans. The homeward journey is taken by the way of Chalfont St. Peter to Rickmansworth, passing King's Farm, where Penn was married in 1672 to his first wife, Guilhelma Springett. The whole journey is through a beautiful country rich in historic and literary associations.

The name of William Penn holds special significance to the people of Bristol, Pennsylvania, because of his close connection and association with the mother town of Bristol, in far-off England. In St. Mary Redcliffe, "the fairest parish church in England," the pride of Bristol men, hangs the armor of Admiral Sir William Penn, who died in 1670. In 1681 his son obtained from Charles II, the grant of a great tract of land beyond the Delaware. The king ordered that in honor of the dead admiral it should be named Pennsylvania, and thither Penn sent hundreds of settlers.

His colony established, Penn returned to England. His wife having died, he was married a second time, at the Friends' Meeting House in the Friary, Bristol, to Hannah Callowhill, granddaughter of Dennis Hollister of that city. While he lived in Bristol he planned the building of streets which still bear the names of Philadelphia, Penn, Hollister and Callowhill. There he had printed "Defense of a paper entitled 'Gospel Truths.'" In the beautiful "Bristol Room" of the city's Central Library is a copy of this rare book. It was during his residence here that Penn took as secretary James Logan, later to become Chief Justice and Governor of Pennsylvania. Bristol, England, and Pennsylvania share memories of a great man, through whom the city which he loved, was linked yet more closely, to the thirteen colonies and to America.

"Return Hoover"

By ELIZABETH S. JARVIS

"Give Mr. Hoover one more chance." He's loyal, kind and true; He'll do the very best he can For this nation, and us, too.

He was trusted in the other lands. So, why not trust him here; He helped those who were in distress, Without a word of fear.

To prove to him that we are true And faithful to the end, Let's put our shoulders to the wheel And send him back again.

Put Mr. Hoover back again, This is my advice; He is the only man who knows A nation's sacrifice.

'Twas he who did in other lands, The things he'll do for us, So put him back again, I pray, And stop this awful "fuss."

He helped those in distress, I say It from my very heart; He paved the way for many a soul, "God bless him" for his part.

Put Mr. Hoover in again, This is my earnest plea; He'll be the savior of us all, This "great big family."

District Attorney Takes Place of Speaker at Session

EUREKA, Oct. 22.—Substituting for Mrs. Samuel Butz, Allentown, a member of the Republican committee of Lehigh county, who because of illness was unable to make her appearance, District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, of Doylestown, Thursday, addressed a group of Warrington township women in the Pleasantville Reformed Church, when the Bucks County Council of Republican Women held a meeting here. District Attorney Eastburn told of his high esteem for President Hoover and explained why a high tariff is necessary to protect home industry. He also explained why it will be important to cast a vote for the reelection of Mr. Hoover. The women were also urged to cast their votes in favor of Congressman Henry W. Watson and for the other candidates on the Republican ticket.

In addition to this, Mr. Eastburn explained the resubmission of the 18th Amendment in a very satisfactory manner.

Mrs. Howard A. Clymer, a director of the Bucks County Council of Republican Women, and who presided at the meeting, extended a welcome to the women and explained the purpose of the meeting.

Mrs. John W. Cooper, Pineville, president of the Bucks County Council of Republican Women, gave an excellent account of the Republican National Convention held in Chicago last Spring. While many of the members heard the proceedings of the convention over the radio, Mrs. Cooper gave the women much information which was not broadcast. Mrs. Cooper also introduced the main speaker of the afternoon.

Mrs. Elwood H. Harrar explained how she is planning to get the women of Warrington township out to vote.

A pleasing feature of the afternoon's program was the singing of several selections by Mrs. George O. Arkwell, of this place, who was accompanied at the piano by Miss Mildred Bruner, of Chalfont, who also contributed to the program with several piano solos.

Before adjournment the women extended a rising vote of thanks to the speakers and to Mrs. Arkwell and Miss Bruner.

Announcement was made of the annual meeting of the Bucks County Council of Republican Women at the Doylestown Country Club on Thursday, October 27th.

Five Prizes Awarded For Costumes at Party

Five prizes were awarded for costumes at the masquerade party of Bristol Group, Epworth League, in the social hall of Bensalem M. E. Church last evening.

Those winning favors were: best dresses, Misses Evelyn and Margaret Becker, as colonial ladies; most original, Miss Elizabeth Foster, dressed as Mahatma Gandhi; funniest, Miss Hazel Ashton and Larry Turton, garbed as babies.

A variety of peppy games amused the more than 100 gathered, the program being outlined under direction of Ernst Holzman, president of the Group. Refreshments were served.

STATE NEWS

ALLENTOWN.—Lehigh County's critical handcuff shortage has been alleviated with the purchase of another half-dozen of the steel "bracelets." The county now has sixteen for the sheriff's office.

Sheriff Wieder and his deputies ran out of handcuffs because of the large number of prisoners taken to the court house for the annual September term.

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XL

"GOODBYE," she said on the doorstep. "I've had a wonderful time. I didn't know anybody could have such a wonderful night, after such a terrible day!"

The faint light from the fan-shaped transom over the door fell on her upturned face. It shone with an almost unearthly beauty. "You don't know what it has meant to me," he heard himself saying, and stopped, horrified at the sound of his own voice.

The spell that had helped them, marionettes in a mad whirl of gaiety all evening, suddenly snapped. Realities came rushing back. She made a quick, frightened movement toward the door.

He held out his hand to say goodbye, and instead, he whispered, "Kiss me, Daphne, just—just once—"

She backed against the door, really frightened now, not knowing what to say. "I can't—I can't," she mumbled, feeling frantically for her keys.

Just as she knew he would, he brushed her resistance aside and took her forcibly, and none too gently in his arms. It was no use to struggle, he held her as she had never been held before.

"Oh, please don't!" she begged. "Ralph—"

"Damn Ralph!" And he forced her head back, and kissed her, one long, drawn-out kiss. She no longer resisted, it seemed inevitable, and inexplicably tragic.

He planned down the stairs with her voice still pounding in his ears. "Oh Allan, Allan—why did you?" The taxi had long since gone. Street cars whizzed past him, but he did not think of boarding one. To keep moving, that was what he wanted, not to think too much.

He thought he was going home, but instead, he found himself headed toward the office. As he turned up California Street he saw the clock on Old St. Mary's and read the carved inscription, "Son, observe the time, and flee from evil!"

He laughed out loud. He had never been in an office building so late at night. How dead and cold it was, with even the charwomen gone, and the paved halls still wet from their mops. It was good to get into the office, to flood the place with light, and feel the good, thick carpet under his feet.

He moved about, restlessly. Why had he come? Tomorrow with its trouble would be here soon enough. He went to his desk, unlocked a drawer. Locked it again, quickly. Tomorrow . . . wait till tomorrow . . .

He shut his eyes, trying to shut out the memories of the day. He thought of old Mr. Greely, slumped in his chair. He might be incapable for days. Weeks perhaps. . . . poor devil . . . poor Ralph.

The overwhelming anger that had consumed him all day had burned itself out. The thought of going to Ralph, of talking to him now. He half rose from the chair. But that was absurd. Tomorrow would be time enough. He thought of Daphne once more . . . of Daphne who would never forgive him, because she would never understand. . . . He covered his face with his hands. "I've made a mess of everything," he groaned. "Everything! What'll she think? Oh, my God—" It seemed to him suddenly that he was going crazy; that if he didn't tell her, he couldn't live.

He snatched a piece of paper and began to write furiously at first, almost illegibly. The throbbing at his temples ceased, his whole tortured being relaxed. He was telling it all to her . . . everything . . . she would never get the letter, but what of that?

It was daylight when he had finished. He looked at the little pile of scribbled sheets. He ought to destroy them at once. He picked them up, made a move as if to tear them, but he couldn't do it . . . not quite yet. Besides, they would be safe enough there in the tin box, in the drawer with the other things. Later, he would destroy them. He put the letter into a blank envelope and sealed it. "Confession is good for the soul," he said grimly. He didn't expect her to forgive him. Nobody could do that. "I'm the perfect failure! The poor fish who wants to do the decent thing, and knows what it is—and then is too weak to do it. Well—there's nothing like facing the facts."

He placed the sealed envelope with the other things in the box, locked it carefully, and left.

Daphne, who had not slept, reached the office earlier than usual, but early as she was, Mr. Sanderson and Mr. McMurtrie were there before her, holding a conference in Mr. Greely's private office. They closed the communicating door when she came in. "Have you heard from Mr. Greely? Is he better this morning?" she asked Mrs. Hobbs, the telephone operator.

Mrs. Hobbs, who was usually a bubbling spring of information, overflowing and running over, readjusted her headpiece and considered. "I believe they did have him on the wire, honey, and he was all right. You were still here when he was taken sick, weren't you?"

"Yes, and Mr. Winters from McKeitt's office was here too. We took him home."

"You did, honey? Well. How did he look, real bad?" It was obviously Mrs. Hobbs' morning for receiving, not giving information.

Miss Yardley was even less communicative. "I don't know a thing about it, I'm sure," she said, "except that he is pretty well this morning. And if I were you I wouldn't bother Mr. McMurtrie or Mr. Sanderson. I am sure they have their hands full with other things."

Towards noon Ralph McKeitt, hat pulled over his eyes, overcoat collar upturned, strode through the outer office, and was closed for hours with McMurtrie and Sanderson. There was restlessness in the office, a shifting of feet, a curious air of expectancy. Everybody seemed to know what was happening. Everybody but Daphne.

"Ralph!" she called timidly when he came out of the private office at last. She even held out her hand, as if to stop him, but if he saw or heard her he gave no sign. He walked right by, his handsome face flushed and drawn, eyes straight ahead. She did not have the courage to follow, or call him again. She felt guilty . . . the memory of that excited, half-mad dancing . . . of Allen Winters' kiss . . . "I must have been crazy," she thought, for the hundredth time.

The long afternoon wore on. She tried to concentrate on her work, struggled to keep her mind on the contract she was copying. Painstakingly, clumsily, her fingers found the meaningless words, but she wasn't really there at the desk at all. She was back in Mr. Greely's office, supporting his heavy head against her shoulder . . . waiting . . . waiting for the doctor to come.

She was in the high, bleak hall in his house watching them lead him upstairs, seeing those three pairs of feet disappear around the bend of the stairway, the taxi driver's yellowish ones, the meek black ones that belonged to the butler, old Mr. Greely's congress boots in the center, so heavy, stumbling on every step, weighed down with his age and weakness. . . . And then she was back in the roadhouse, laughing and eating and dancing. . . . Dancing . . . while Mr. Greely lay perhaps at death's door. . . . And they were on the narrow porch at Mrs. Hinckle's where so many times Ralph, whom she loved and would always love, no matter if he never spoke to her again, had lightly, gently, kissed her good-night. . . .

"When he knew we love each other, and he's supposed to be Ralph's friend, how could he?" she asked herself, over and over again.

Around and around her thoughts went, in meaningless circles, stopping and starting, beginning again, around and around like a merry-go-round.

It was the office boy who told her, just as she was going home. He was a serious young man, with large, stickout ears and an eager, nervous way of speaking.

"Oh Miss Haines, I have a note a lady left for you. I hope it wasn't important. I was so busy today in all the excitement I forgot to give it to you."

"What was the excitement?" she asked idly.

"Why didn't you hear?" He leaned toward her, and said in his loud, clear voice, with the little nervous rushes. "Ralph Iverson McKeitt almost went under today, that's all. The market dropped, and when he went to cover his margin he found that collateral he thought he had had been sold and twenty thousand drawn out of the bank without his knowledge. He'd have been sunk all right if it hadn't been for Mr. Greely coming through. McMurtrie and Sanderson wouldn't. Lucky for him that the old man didn't die, I say."

With his spectacled eyes on her she couldn't quite realize the enormity of what he was saying. She fingered the note in her hands. "He—he's safe? He's all right?"

CHEAPNESS makes only one-time customers. Quality makes lifetime friends. The reliable merchant is more concerned with goods that will truly serve than with goods that will merely sell.

You won't have to buy so often if you buy Quality oftener. When you pay far less than Quality you've bought something short of Value; you've gained something short of Economy.

Buy good goods. If it isn't good, it isn't a bargain. The merchant that fosters only Quality merchandise does so because he considers it good business to do so. He is guarding his good reputation because he has earned one to protect. He is guarding the good-will of his customers because he has built up that good-will by safeguarding their interests, satisfaction, economy.

Quality is not costly today. Prices are low. Cheap goods are costly because their prices are too low to include substantial service and value.

MILO TO OPPOSE ST. ANN'S HERE TOMORROW

Still after its first victory of the season, the St. Ann's A. A. football team will play the well-known Milo A. C. tomorrow afternoon on Sullivan's field.

The Milo club has a good reputation in the football game and comes here well recommended, having met the best teams in the vicinity of Philadelphia. Several years back the St. Ann's team was matched with this great eleven and the fray was cancelled.

The "Saints" are having one of their most disastrous seasons. In three starts the club has failed to score a victory, although in each fray the Bristol eleven outplayed the victors.

During practice the past week Coach Pico drilled the backfield intensively on the taking out of men. The main downfall of the team seems to be in the backfield and the St. Ann's mentor has been working hard to iron out those faults.

Last week another casualty was added to the list. "Monk" Oriola, versatile center, sprained his ankle. "Tink" Spadaccino was also injured but it is not known whether or not he will be in the fray.

"Shane" Seneca, "Moonie" Seneca, and "Shine" Gilardi, will be back in the line while "Eddie" Tosti who was injured in the Cheltenham fray will again perform in the backfield.

The "Saints" have purchased new jerseys and will wear them for the first time this week-end. The jerseys are gold with purple trimmings about the shoulders and sleeves.

The fray will begin at 2.30 o'clock.

When Bristol was penalized 15 yards, which put the ball on the three-yard line, with four downs to take it over. Brickleyer on the try played through for their second tally of the game. He also made the extra point on a line buck.

With only three and a half minutes to play, Doylestown kicked badly to the 40-yard line. Borneice was given the ball, and due to good interference, with wonderful open-field running he sped around right end over 60 yards of alien territory for Bristol's lone tally. The drop kick for the extra point failed.

Line-up:

Bristol	position	Doylestown

CONFIDENCE SHOWN BY CROYDON XI. FOR SUNDAY

The Croydon football team will enter into one of its hardest games this season when the boys trot out on the field to meet the fast Olney Aces, tomorrow afternoon at 2.30. The fray will be at Eddington field.

According to reports and the respective line-ups the visitors will outweigh the local squad nearly 20 pounds to the man. Croydon claims average line weight of 165 pounds while the Aces admit a poundage over 180, as an average.

Croydon, however, met a much heavier team than themselves last Sunday when they stalemated Beaumont A. C. and Coach Morgan has little fear that his team will not hold. With his confidence in back of them the Croydon team will go into game with full expectation of carrying on a record of being undefeated thus far this season.

It is likely that Stet Crossley will be out of the line-up this week. Crossley is undoubtedly the star backfield man of the team. According to the report he was injured in the game last Sunday and is suffering from a semi-fracture of the ribs. However the backfield will be bolstered since the acceptance of a new candidate, Dean, of Cornwells. Tunis, a new end man, has also been admitted to the club and the squad. This man, who is reported to be fast may replace Jimmy Lake who may be shifted into the backfield, to meet the Aces.

Although the Olney Aces will be a hard nut to crack, Croydon, is facing a harder ordeal on the following Sunday, October 30, when they meet the sailors of the U. S. S. Indianapolis.

Breakup of the A's?

By HARDIN BURNLEY

THREE FAMOUS STARS WHO WERE PURCHASED FROM THE ATHLETICS BY THE CHICAGO WHITE SOX!

WHEN the baseball season opens next April for the season of 1933, followers of the national game will find it a trifle difficult, at first, to accustom themselves to seeing the names of Simmons, Haas and Dykes in the batting order of the Chicago White Sox.

Philadelphia fans had soured no little on Al Simmons, the Milwaukee Pole, who still has a year to go on a contract calling for $33,333 annually. Yet in letting him go Connie Mack said Simmons was and still is the greatest right-handed hitter in the game.

Mule Haas, the speedy centre fielder included in the deal, has the distinction of being the first man ever to pinch-hit for Ty Cobb. Jimmy Dykes was Connie Mack's third baseman and utility infielder of the A's for four years. When the deal was announced dramatically on the second day of the world series, baseball writers everywhere were of the opinion that standing stars of his pennant winning teams of '29, '30 and '31 presaged the breaking up of his championship roster. It was forecast that an early announcement would be made of the sale of Walberg, Earnshaw and even of the great Bob Grove, greatest left-hander of modern times.

The lean mentor of the White Elephants set these rumors at rest, however, with an announcement that he would stand pat with his present lineup. He said he would start the 1932 season with a new outfield of Cramer, Coleman and Finney, with Miller in reserve. Cramer and Coleman had their baptism of fire in the 1932 race, both of them impressing by their fine fielding and powerful hitting before being forced out of competition for the year by injuries. Finney was with the A's a few years ago, and since that time has been an outstanding star in the Coast League, with Portland.

Some change say that with the 1933, Connie Mack has made a good move. Certainly he has strengthened the hapless White Sox, who may be able to build a contender around Simmons, Haas and Dykes and regain some of the lost prestige of the American League in the West. Simmons and Haas are both 29. Dykes is 36. Coleman, Cramer and Finney are all in their early twenties, and Higgins, who will replace Dykes at third for the A's, is a mere youngster.

Mack may figure that as long as he can strengthen second-division clubs without weakening his own team he will be gaining an advantage over the all-powerful Yanks. Last season the Yanks took nearly all of their games with the White Sox. If the White Sox had split even with the Yanks, the latter team would have led the A's at the end of the season by no more than a game or two. Undoubtedly this was in Connie Mack's mind when he sold his three siege guns down the
